Artist Statement:

I wanted to create a gameday graphic that showed the energy and excitement of our basketball team, so I started by looking through sports templates on Canva. I found one that inspired me, but I deleted the original images and replaced them with a photo I took of one of our players to make it more personal.

I used the photo as the background and added a filter to give it a dramatic look. Then I copied the photo, cut out the background, and placed the player on top so the filter wouldn't affect him. This helped him stand out as the main focus.

I kept the textured font from the template but changed the words to "It's Game Day!" I also changed the blue to our school's goldish yellow and added black to match our school colors. I put the date, time, and location inside gradient boxes so the text would be easy to read without covering the player.

The original template was an MVP post with the player's name and a line underneath it. I removed the player's name, but I liked the idea of having something under the text for emphasis. The original line felt too clean and neat, so I replaced it with a more energetic scribble that better matched the intensity of gameday. I wanted the final design to feel bold and full of school spirit.
