

In this project, I created everything from scratch, starting with a blank piece of paper. I started by roughly sketching the design and layout I wanted on a piece of typing paper before starting my project. Once I had an idea of how I wanted to display the elements of my editorial, I sketched everything out on a piece of drawing paper with a pencil. Once I was content with my sketches, I started working on the small pictures inside the thought bubbles. I used colored pencils to add color to the pictures and fine point Sharpie markers to define the edges. The borders I made with the Sharpies helped to add depth to the pictures and really make them pop. I repeated this process to create the running cross country athlete. I traced the thought bubbles with a black fine point Sharpie, and I made the title of my project pink so it stood out. I finished my project by shading the grass and sky. I enjoyed the process of creating my editorial because I am a cross country athlete myself, so I was able to draw on my emotions and experiences to make this project come to life. From the start of this project to the finish, the whole process took me around two hours to complete.
