

For this piece (our yearbook cover for this year), I started from a complete blank slate. I used the app Procreate on my Ipad to create this. In total, it only took me around a week to complete this design. I went back and forth a lot on how I wanted to organize the elements in the drawing. The first part was spent on sketching out designs. I wanted to originally include a mascot... however, our school doesn't have an "official" mascot to base it off of. So, I decided to just follow our theme this year for the yearbook...that theme being: Music! I decided to add the many different sources of music we have used in the past and the present, such as: vinyl records, CDs, phones/MP3 players, SD cards and cassette tapes. The second part was figuring out where everything would be placed, alongside which color palette I wanted to use. I decided to keep a generally simple color palette to give the piece a color POP! The final part was shading it all and adding shadows where need be. All in all, I really enjoyed putting together this piece! This was kind of an experiment for me in the sense that I've never actually used such a strict palette before. I think I did pretty well, all things considered, and I'm really excited to see this on a physical copy of the yearbook!
