To start this infographic for an in-depth about Chieftains' summer jobs, I sent out a survey on Google Forms and gathered the included information from 104 students recorded on Aug. 27, 2025. Then I created a 13.063 x 11.125 inch blank document on Canva. Next, I changed the background color to a vibrant coral to encapsulate the bright, fun summer months. After choosing the background color, I decided to add dimension by adding orange and yellow gradients from the elements tab in Canva to the opposite corners of the page. When I completed the background, I sorted through text styles on Canva and settled on the font Anton for "Students" and Carlsons Script for "Summer Jobs." Next, to make the headline more eye-catching, I changed the title to different colors, such as teal and lemon yellow, to keep the summer vibe. To insert the data from the survey, I used Canva's Chart feature under the elements tab and created multiple different charts for variance, including a donut and bar graph. Next, using the text tool, I typed the corresponding data next to its graph. After I had completed that step, I changed the text from plain white to different bright colors to really catch the eye and draw attention towards the data. Lastly, I noticed the infographic looked a bit plain. To fix this, I went into the Elements tab and looked for certain summer elements and settled on palm leaves and bird silhouettes. To finish my design, I added the palm leaves to opposite corners, similar to the orange and yellow gradients, and then inserted the bird silhouettes to the top corners, creating a summer-filled layout.
